The Aim of a Blended Learning Seminar

Blended learning can be employed for a large variety of learning situations. For example, formative testing is often used to give students the opportunity to determine whether or not they have mastered the subject matter. It also gives instructors insight into students' progress, and they can use information obtained from a digital formative test to adapt their lecture. In this way they also take advantage of the input given by students online.

This course will enable students to acquire the principles and methodological insights afforded by postcolonial theory in order to critically analyse both Western and non-Western histories, politics, conflicts, literatures, cinema, visual, digital and popular culture at large.

Following the blended learning course Key Concepts in Postcolonial Studies: Theories, Approaches, Methods we are providing you with an opportunity to give feedback. Your participation will enable Prof. Dr. Plummer and her team to make the blended learning format more user friendly and efficient. Therefore, you are invited to join Ms. Bonnes (ZHQE) for a brief get together, where you can share your thoughts and opinions. Light refreshments will be provided.
