Kantor, Florian Plum, Kate Schweißhelm, Lina Tegtmeier, Natalia Klimina, Nathan Vanderpool, Rebecca Brückmann, and Ruth Steinhoff—lifted me up when spirit, health, or faith were low. The Graduate School of North American Studies and the John F. Kennedy Institute gave me the opportunity to write my thesis in an intellectually stimulating environment in Berlin, Germany, and abroad. With her heart-warming presence and her patience, Gabi Bodmeier often saved me from my bureaucratic incompetence.

At the Department of Anglophone Studies of the University of Duisburg-Essen, I am indebted to Barbara Buchenau for her faith in and support of my work. Of my friends and colleagues at the University of Duisburg-Essen, to all of whom I am grateful for creating a stimulating and supportive environment, I particularly acknowledge Elena Furlanetto, Zohra Hassan, and Courtney Moffett-Bateau. Their astuteness, knowledge, and openness have taught me to thrive as an intellectual and as a person.

At Palgrave Macmillan I have been lucky to find highly professional support for the book, and thank in particular Lina Aboujib and Hariharan Venugopal. I am especially grateful for the thoughtful and perceptive comments provided by the anonymous reviewers. Earlier versions of Chaps. 6, 7, and 8 were previously published in Animation Studies, Volume 8 (2013), NECSUS European Journal for Media Studies (Spring 2014), and European Journal of American Culture, Volume 33, Issue 3 (2014), respectively. A section of the introduction appeared in the volume Rereading the Machine in the Garden (2014) edited by Eric Erbacher, Nicole Maruo-Schröder, and Florian Sedlmeier. I am grateful for the permission to reproduce material here.

The friendship of many wonderful people has inspired and uplifted me during the research and writing. I deeply appreciate their belief in me. My parents and my sister supported me even when my path appeared hazardous and disheartening. I thank Hajo and Kay, for without you, none of this would exist.
